Abate thy houres, ſhine comforts from the eaſt,
That I may backe to Athens by day-light,
From theſe that my poore company deteſt;
And ſleepe that ſometimes ſhuts vp ſorrowes eie,
Steale me a while from mine owne company. Sleepe.
Rob. Yet but three? Come one more,
Two of both kindes makes vp foure.
Here ſhe comes, curſt and ſad,
Cupid is a knauiſh lad, Enter Hermia.
Thus to make poore females mad.
Her. Neuer ſo weary, neuer ſo in woe,
Bedabbled with the dew, and torne with briars,
I can no further crawle, no further goe;
My legs can keepe no pace with my deſires.
Here will I reſt me till the breake of day,
Heauens ſhield Lyſander, if they meane a fray.
Rob. On the ground ſleepe ſound,
Ile apply your eye gentle louer, remedy.
When thou wak'ſt, thou tak'ſt
True delight in the ſight of thy former Ladies eie,
And the Country Prouerbe knowne,
That euery man ſhould take his owne,
In your waking ſhall be ſhowne.
Iacke ſhall haue Iill, nought ſhall go ill,
The man ſhall haue his Mare againe, and all ſhall be well.
Enter Queene of Fairies, and Clowne, and Fairies, and the King behinde them.
Tita. Come ſit thee downe vpon this flowry bed,
While I thy amiable cheekes do coy,
And ſticke muske roſes in thy ſleeke ſmoothe head,
And kiſſe thy faire large eares, my gentle ioy.
Clowne. Where's Peaſe bloſſome?
Peaſ. Ready.
Clowne. Scratch my head, Peaſe-bloſſome. Wher's Mounſieur Cobweb? Cob. Ready.

Clown.

Clo. Mounſieur Cobweb, good Mounſieur ge pons in your hand, and kill me a red hipt humb the top of a thiſtle; and good Mounſieur bring ny bag. Doe not fret your ſelfe too much in Mounſieur; and good Mounſieur haue a care th breake not, I would be loth to haue you ouerfl hony-bag ſigniour. Where's Mounſieur Muſt Muſ. Ready.
Clo. Giue me your neaſe, Mounſieur Muſtardſ
Pray you leaue your courteſie, good Mounſieu Muſt. What's your wil?
Clo. Nothing good Mounſieur, but to hel Cobweb to ſcratch. I muſt to the Barbers Mo me-thinkes I am maruailous hairy about the f am ſuch a tender aſſe, if my haire do but tickle ſcratch.
Tita. What, wilt thou heare ſome ſome muſi loue?
Clowne I haue a reaſonable good eare in mu haue the tongs and the bones.
Tita. Or ſay ſweete Loue, what thou deſire Clow. Truely a pecke of prouender; I could good dry Oates. Me-thinkes I haue a great de tle of hay: good hay, ſweete hay hath no fello Tita. I haue a venturous Fairy,
That ſhall ſeeke the ſquirrels hoard,
And fetch thee new Nuts.
Clo. I had rather haue a handfull or two of
But I pray you let none of your people ſtir me, poſition of ſleepe come vpon me.
Tyta. Sleepe thou, and I will winde thee in Fairies be gone, and be alwaies away.
So doth the woodbine, the ſweete Honiſuckle
Gently entwiſt; the female Iuy ſo
Enrings the barky fingers of the Elme.